the detroit educational bulletin volumes 3 6 Abstract. In 1930, Detroit was the nation's fourth largest city and one of the world's great manufacturing centers. 1 During the 1920s its schools had been transformed along Progressive lines and, by 1929, were considered among the best in the nation. The Great Depression, however, devastated the city's economy and plunged its schools into an unparalleled financial crisis.

the detroit educational bulletin volumes 3 6 In Detroit, as was the case in the other cities we studied, parents struggle to navigate the city's complex education marketplace and find quality options for their children. For parents like Ms. Gordon, a lack of information, confusing paperwork, and transportation gaps all make it hard to find a school that will work for their child.
